Whitehall, September 25, 1779.

BY Lieutenant-Colonel Prevost, who arrived in Town on the 23d Instant from Georgia, a Letter from Major-General Prevost to Lord George Germain, One of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries State, dated at Savannah the 4th of August, has been received, of which the following is an Extract.

Extract of a Letter from Major-General Prevost to Lord George Germain, dated Savannah, August 4, 1779.

SINCE my last Dispatches from St. John's Island, (Copies of which are herewith sent) I have had no Opportunity to write directly to your Lordship; our Operations since that Time have been chiefly confined in removing from one Island to another, and establishing the different Posts intended to be occupied during the great Heat, and the sickly Season: However on the 20th of June, after every Preparation had been made to abandon the Post on the Main at Stono Ferry, and to quit the Island of St Johns', the Enemy's whole force attacked that Post with 8 Pieces of Cannon and 5000 Men; their Attack was at first spirited, but the good Countenance of the Troops, and the Fire of the Armed Flat that covered the Left Flank of our Post, just as the Troops were ferrying over to reinforce it, obliged the Enemy to retreat; a favorable Opportunity of pursuing them and giving them a severe Check was lost for the Want of the Horses, which had been sent away two or three Days before; and, before the Troops arrived on the Ground, the Rebels had got too great a Distance to expect to come up with them with the Foot. I have the Honor of sending herewith a Return of our Loss on that Day. Lieutenant-Colonel Maitland, who commanded there, had with him the First Battalion 71st, then much reduced, a weak Battalion of Hessians, and the Refugees of North and South Carolina, amounting in the whole to about 800 Men; they all behaved with Coolness and Bravery. The Enemy lost a Colonel of Artillery much esteemed amongst them, and about 28 Officers of different Ranks, and between 3 and 400 killed and wounded; they were enabled to carry off the latter, and many of the former, by having a Number of empty Waggons, brought along with them for that Purpose. The Troops, after remaining three Days longer on that Ground, at last abandoned it, and began to move towards Port Royal Island, where the last arrrived about the 12th ult. A Corps has been left there sufficient to act at all Times upon a most respectable Defensive, and occasionally to harrass the Quarters of the Enemy, and those Parts of the Province that are accessible to our Gallies and Boats from the Bay of St. Helena; it cannot be elegible to extend our Posts far to the Westward, for Reasons for which I beg Leave to refer to Lieutenant-Colonel Prevost, whose Departure I must lament, as his Abilities and Zeal for the Service made him a most useful Assistant upon every Occasion: His Knowledge of the Country and its Resources will enable him to give your Lordship every necessary Information; Sir James Wright's Arrival in the Experiment, the 13th Instant, having relieved him from the Civil Administration.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL Prevoſt has alſo brought a Triplicate of another Letter from Major-General Prevoſt to Lord George Germain, dated Head Quarters, St. John's Iſland, 12 Miles from Charles-Town, June 10, 1779, of which the following is an Extract; neither the Original or Duplicate having been received.

Extract of a Letter from Major-General Prevoſt to Lord George Germain, dated Head Quarters, St. John's Iſland, 12 Miles from Charles Town, June 10, 1779.

I Would have been happy to be able to acquaint your Lordſhip with the Surrender of Charles-Town.

I ſhall relate to your Lordſhip the Means by which our Progreſs was ſo little interrupted, and the Reaſons for bringing His Majeſty's Army into this Province.

Towards the latter End of April I received Information that General Lincoln (who till then had occupied a Poſition on the North Side of Savannah River, by which he equally covered every Part of a River at all Times extremely difficult, but deemed impaſſible in Times of Freſhes, and in the Face of an Army) had marched the beſt Part of his Army towards Auguſta, to penetrate from thence into Georgia, and to protect a Meeting of the Rebel Delegates appointed to meet at Auguſta on the 10th Ultimo; this Conſideration, added to a Wiſh to preſerve the Reputation of His Majeſty's Arms, by acting on the Offenſive, and to oblige Mr. Lincoln to quit his Project, and to procure Proviſions from this Province for our Army, induced me to penetrate into Carolina. The Corps of Obſervation of the Rebel Army being about 2 000 Men, but chiefly Militia, under the Command of Brigadier-General Moultrie, ſurpriſed to ſee the Britiſh Troops emerging from Swamps deemed impaſſable, were ſtruck with ſuch a Panic as to make but a weak Reſiſtance, at the ſeveral ſtrong Paſſes through which we had to paſs in Purſuit of them, and fled, with the greateſt Hurry and Conſternation, towards Charles-Town. The Enemies were ſo well perſuaded that we only meant to forage the Country, that it was not till ſome Days after our Progreſs into South Carolina, that General Lincoln could be perſuaded to retreat, and come to the Aſſiſtance of Charles-Town; towards which he immediately detached a Body of Infantry, mounted for the Purpoſe of Diſpatch, and after collecting all the Militia of the upper Parts of the County, he proceeded himſelf towards Dorcheſter. The Facility with which the Britiſh Army had proceeded towards Charles Town, notwithſtanding the Numbers of Rivers, Creeks and Swamps, and the natural Impediments of the Country, added to the repeated Suggeſtions of the Friends of Government we met with, who aſſured us poſitively, that Charles-Town would certainly ſurrender at our Approach, induced me, with the Advice of all the Field Officers of the Army, to make the Attempt; and Lieutenant-Colonel Prevoſt, who commanded the Advance, had Orders to ſummon them the 12th Inſt.; but I have the greateſt Reaſon to believe, that the Want of a Naval Force to co-operate with us, our Want of Battering Artillery, and momentary Expectations of a Reinforcement, and the Approach of General Lincoln's Army, actuated them in the Propoſal they made of a Neutrality for their Province, and the Refuſal of the generous Offers made to them if they would ſurrender. The numerous Artillery mounted on their Ramparts, their Shipping and Galleys covering and flanking their Lines; our ſmall Numbers, not having more than 2000 fit for Duty; and the Riſk of ſtaking the Safety of this ſmall but ſpirited Army, and the Province of Georgia, induced me, and every Member of the Council of War held on this Occaſion, to reſolve to return to the South-ſide of Aſhly River, where a Part of the Troops had been left to ſecure the Paſſage of that River, and our Retreat if neceſſary. From that Time the Troops have been chiefly on the Iſlands of St. James and St. John, in Hopes and Expectations of the Supplies which our long unexpected March, the heavy Rains, the many Rivers we had to croſs, had rendered indiſpenſible to us; the firſt that came, for Want of a ſufficient Naval Force, was partly taken and deſtroyed, and the Reſt drove back by a few Rebel Privateers. His Majeſty's Ships the Perſeus and Roſe are ſince arrived off the Coaſt with the Ammunition and Proviſions we wanted.

I ſhall ſhortly change my Quarters to Beaufort, where the Advantage of keeping a Footing in Carolina, and quartering the Troops during the great Heat of the Weather, and the unhealthy Seaſon, in the beſt Situation, are combined with that of being the moſt eligible Poſition for effectually covering and ſecuring Georgia from any Attempt of the Enemy.
